Leading Workforce 2030: Trends that are Redefining the Workplace, the Workers and the Work

Research suggests that by 2030 workers will be older and younger at the same time, more educated and less skilled, more hyper-connected, and more ethnically diverse. How can we ready our organizations for this new workforce reality? What new competencies and skills will be necessary to harness the benefits of these global disruptions? Dr. Shirley Davis, a recognized authority on the global workforce and leadership coach will detail the megatrends and business implications that will shape the workforce of the future. Additionally, she will provide practical strategies that leaders should employ if they expect to achieve high performance.
